abundantly clear that the limitations apply to the Legislative as well as to the Judicial branch of Government. Now, all in favor, signify by a show of hands. Contrary.

The motion is carried, 11 to 6.

Now, Mr. Sayre, your point?

MR. SAYRE: My question here is regarding bail. I don't see that we have provided for a person being bailable, depending upon the seriousness of the crime.

PROFESSOR ASPER: The final paragraph of our comments, which is rather concise form, or a discussion the Committee conducted on that: Most State constitutions, about forty of them as I remember, do provide that, say, a right to bail, but then they have to start qualifying it with some extremely peculiar language, most common, they have a right to bail, excepting capital cases, sometimes capital cases or those punishable by life imprisonment, some other cases specifying a list of crimes for which this right to bail will not exist, when proof is evident or the presumption great, which is very common language, and I don't think there is a soul in
